Ordinance No. 2024-40 Annexing the Subject Properties, Assigning the Residential Medium Intensity Future Land Use Designation, and Initial Zoning of Medium Intensity Development for the Properties Generally Located North of Raehn Street, East of Clark Street, West of Wise Avenue, and South of Vine Street, and Comprised of 2.1 Acres (Hourglass Townhomes Annexation) (Economic Development)

Summary:

Ordinance No. 2024-40 will annex the ±2.1 acre property along with the northern portion of Winn Ave. into the City limits. The ordinance will also amend the City's Growth Management Plan (GMP) to change the Future Land Use designation from Orange County's Residential designation to the City's Residential Medium (RES-MED) designation and assign the initial zoning designation of R-3B (Medium Intensity Development).

The site currently includes three lots with single-family residences and two vacant lots, with plans to develop thirty-six (36) townhomes and connect to the City sewer system. The subject properties are contiguous to the City limits, and the annexation will not create an enclave.

City Council accepted the petition for annexation on August 12, 2024 and the Municipal Planning Board (MPB) recommended approval of the associated cases on August 20, 2024. City Council approved the MPB meeting minutes on September 9, 2024. First reading of this ordinance occurred on September 23, 2024.

easy payment" plans, which arrive without planning, and people can be in big trouble.

Get help before it's too late

If consumers are having debt problems, they are bound to see more late-night TV commercials and internet popup ads touting for-profit debt settlement companies. But here's a warning: They can often get you into more trouble than they realize.

The "for-profit" model of debt settlement asks you to stop paying your cards. Instead, these companies want you to send them a lump sum every month, which will build up a pool of cash for them to use in negotiating with your creditors for a reduced-balance payoff.

And sometimes it works. At least for a few of your debts.

But in the meantime, your credit is ruined because you aren't making even those minimum payments on a few of your cards. Once you're delinquent, your creditors may go to court to get a civil judgment — or even garnish your wages in some states. Even a quicksand of your own making.

Trusted credit counseling

The member agencies of the NFCC provide in-person counseling or will discuss your issues over the phone. Reach the nearest local member agency by calling 800-368-2227 or search at NFCC.org.

There are several levels of help available. Professional counselors will make recommendations about adjusting your budget and dealing with debt. Or, if the burden is too great, they offer a debt management program.

They work with your creditors to accept lower monthly payments, while you send the agency a lump sum every month. The money is distributed to creditors, who stop pursuing you.

Simple counseling does not go on your credit report, while a debt management plan does get reported. But it has less impact than a bankruptcy. Don't hide from your debt. Deal with it now, before it gets worse. You'll be glad you did.

Your energy bill too high? Try these ideas

By Daniel Bortz
Kiplinger's Personal Finance

Electric bills have soared in the past few years and are expected to continue to climb. Try these simple changes to trim your bill:

See whether your utility provider offers time-of-use pricing: Take advantage of a dynamic pricing plan, through which a utility supplier charges customers higher or lower rates depending on when they consume electricity. In some states, every household is automatically placed in a time-of-use price plan, so you may already be enrolled in one without knowing it. Contact your utility provider to learn more.

Get a smart thermostat: If you still have a manual thermostat, you may want to upgrade to a smart thermostat, a device that allows you to control the temperature of your home from an app.

Turning your thermostat down 7 to 10 degrees from its normal setting for eight hours a day in the winter and dialing it up 7 to 10 degrees for eight hours a day in the summer can cut your heating and cooling costs by as much as 10% a year, according to the Department of Energy.

Keep your HVAC system in tip-top shape: Maximizing your HVAC system's efficiency can help reduce your home's heating and cooling costs. Replace the air filters every three months or according to the manufacturer's instructions. It's also a good idea to schedule an annual tune-up with an HVAC technician, who can check for signs of a leak or damage that could be hindering your system's performance.

Block out sunlight in the summer: LED bulbs also last up to 25 times longer, according to the DOE.

close draperies or blinds on windows that receive direct sunlight. Consider medium-colored draperies with white-plastic backings, which the DOE says can reduce heat gain by 33%, on average.

Pay attention to gaps or cracks around air vents, windows and doors: Caulking air leaks throughout your home — an inexpensive DIY project — can trim your energy bill by 10% to 20%, the DOE says.

Install energy-efficient lighting: "Installing LED lights is a no-brainer, since they provide a great return on investment," says Bahareh van Boekhold of ILLUME Advising. Incandescent consume about 60 watts of electricity, while LED light bulbs use only about 10 watts, on average, according to EnergySage. LED bulbs also last up to 25 times longer, according to the DOE.

Adjust your water heater: Some manufacturers set water heaters to 140 degrees, an unnecessarily high temperature. Lowering the temperature to 120 degrees could save you more than $400 a year and reduces the risk of scalding.

Cook efficiently: When it comes to energy consumption, it's better to use a toaster oven instead of a full-size oven, especially if you are just reheating leftovers, says Jennifer Annann of the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy.

Wash clothes in cold water: Heating water makes up 90% of the energy it takes to run a washing machine, the Environmental Protection Agency says, so consider using the cold-water cycle for most loads; reserve hot water for heavily soiled clothing, linens and towels, and white garments that easily show dirt.

Teams

and rewarded for the work they do together and their ability to synthesize their perspectives into a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts," Zaki says. Another way to foster collaboration is through the use of 360-degree evaluations, gathering input from an employee's colleagues, as well as their manager for their performance reviews. "Even if a company doesn't use stack ranking, it will still suffer from what I call a 'culture of genius,' especially in Silicon Valley," Zaki says. "If a person is really talented, they are evaluated only for their individual talents and not for how they affect the people around them. A 360 evaluation allows you to say, 'What do your colleagues think about you? Are you a good person to work with?' Those can be useful metrics as well."

The power of collective intelligence
A spirit of cooperation opens the door for collective intelligence. Zaki likes to refer to research that Google conducted in 2012, dubbed Project Aristotle, to understand the characteristics of its most efficient and innovative teams. "They thought that the talent of individuals would be the strongest predictor of team success, and they were wrong," he says. "It turned out that there was a collective feature of how people come together that was more definitive of their success than what any individual brought to the table."

It became known as collective intelligence — this idea that not just people, but groups of people, have their own aptitude, and that every combination of human beings is like a super organism with its own qualities.

Successful teams combine healthy competition and cooperation, creating a vibrant back and forth, where people share their perspective and listen to one another, Zaki says. "If you build a cooperative team environment, you're going to build a more intelligent team environment. And you'll be better equipped to compete in the world today."

water heater or gutters or new windows should all be documented as improvements.

Keep a separate filing box over the years for housing improvements.

The stop-up basis rule. The stop-up basis rule is more of an estate-planning rule than a home-sale rule.

But I regularly hear from seniors who want to sell their family home to their children, hoping to avoid some estate distribution problems.

Think twice. If you die with the home still in your name (or the name of your revocable living trust), there is no capital gains tax, even on a large gain.

Instead, the value of the home as inherited is its value on the date of death.

If the heirs sell it immediately, there is no tax due. (Check with your accountant and estate attorney about your situation.)

Using home equity. Many seniors need cash but want to remain in their homes. They have two choices — both of them expensive, unless amortized over at least a decade.

The first choice is a reverse mortgage, which will give you a lump sum of cash or a monthly withdrawal from your home equity.

But there are fees associated with this deal, as well as interest to be paid, although the loan itself is not repaid until you sell the home, move or die.

But you must pay property taxes, insurance and upkeep. Learn more at ReverseMortgage.org.

A second choice is a home equity loan or line of credit.

The first gives you a lump sum, and the second works like a credit card, which you can use as needed to draw down your home equity.

Again, there are fees involved, as well as interest, and — unlike RMs — loan repayments must be made. Check rates at Bankrate.com.

Your home may have been a wonderful piggy bank over the years. Just make your withdrawals carefully and don't smother those savings in your attempt to get at the cash. That's the Savage Truth.

Improvements that can reduce energy bills

By Daniel Rortz
Siplinger's Personal Finance

Sometimes you need to spend money to save money. That's true when it comes to making home improvements to lower your energy bill. Here are some to consider.

Order an energy audit: Many experts recommend that before you make any home improvements, you should get an energy audit, a whole-house diagnostic assessment by an energy professional that will identify ways you can make your home more efficient.

A home energy audit typically costs $200 to $700, according to Angi, a home-services website.

See whether your utility company provides a subsidy or rebate for an energy audit, says Joel Rosenberg, a researcher at the nonprofit Rewiring America. Homeowners may also be eligible for a federal tax credit of 30% of the cost of an energy audit, with a maximum credit of $150 a year.

Get a customized plan with this online tool: Rewiring America recently released a Personal Electrification Planner (homes.rewiringamerica.org), which you can use to get an energy-efficiency plan tailored to you based on your home, lifestyle and goals. Plug in your home's address, square footage and a few other details, and the planner will generate a list of home improvements, including cost estimates for each project, as well as the annual energy savings and carbon-emission reductions they'll provide.

Earn energy tax credits:

The Inflation Reduction Act, legislation signed in 2022, offers tax credits and deductions for energy-efficient home improvements. The Energy Efficient Home Improvement Credit lets homeowners claim a tax credit for up to 30% of the cost of certain energy-efficient improvements, up to $1,200 a year. Even more generous: Homeowners can qualify for a yearly credit of 30% of the cost, up to $2,000 a year, of heat-pump water heaters and heat pumps for heating and cooling your home that meet the highest "nonadvanced" efficiency tier set by the Consortium for Energy Efficiency.

Outfit your home with energy-efficient appliances: Over their lifetimes, Energy Star-certified appliances can reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 130,000 pounds and save $11,000 on your home's energy bills, according to the Environmental Protection Agency. You can see whether your utility provider offers rebates for Energy Star appliances at www.energy.gov/energystar/index.

Consider solar panels: It costs about $30,000, on average, to purchase and install a 10-kilowatt solar system, according to EnergySage.

Fortunately, the Inflation Reduction Act provides homeowners a 30% tax credit for solar installations until 2032.

For a typical home, it takes seven to eight years to break even, EnergySage says. Homeowners who install a solar panel system can save $38,000 to $20,000 over 25 years.

Novelty

you can give your mind space to step outside of your evaluating, pursuing mode and give it space to have a new cognitive experience, it will take off."

Finally, avoid the temptation to check out and go on autopilot during monotonous tasks. "When you're on autopilot, you're not really experiencing anything of value," Besser says. "You're just going through the motions. If you can better engage with what you're doing, you will enhance your workplace experiences." Pay attention and respond to the details, she suggests. You can also tap your senses, using them to deliver stimulation and connection with what you're doing.

Why novelty is important
While novelty doesn't necessarily enhance happiness, Besser says it contributes to psychological richness. "Research shows that this is an important part of people's lives overall," she says. "It's an experience in the mind where you are engaging in new frames of thinking, stimulating interest and arousing and engaging your thoughts."

Novelty can also combat boredom. "We know that boredom in the workplace inhibits productivity and lowers employee satisfaction," says Besser. "One of the things that resolves boredom is to engage more with what you're doing."

Novel experiences also enhance small moments in your day to day life. Since you're more likely to remember them, Besser says they can shape and improve how you experience other events, helping to change your perspective, potentially generating more interesting ideas.

Novelty can affect self-expansion too. "Psychologically rich experiences lead towards a greater sense of self," says Besser. "My gut tells me that this is happening because we are tapping into different kinds of cognitive reactions and emotions. These are the kinds of things that can get squeezed away when you're too focused on your plans or agendas. When you allow your brain to operate fully and engage in interesting experiences, you expand your very notion of yourself, seeing yourself as more robust and tapping into a greater sense of identity through it."

A life without challenge also shrinks your potential and what you may be capable of experiencing. "Interesting experiences offer a distinctive and unique aspect of this dimension of the good life," Besser says. "It's simply engaging in what we're doing in a different way."

While clinging to your routines may feel safe and productive, a life without novelty can be boring and impoverished, says Besser. "If you don't seek out something new, you get stuck in cycles of comfort and stability," she says. "Comfort and stability are important — and there are times in our lives where that's what we need — but if you stay within your circles of comfort and safety, you're going to live a very one-dimensional life."
