ORANGE COUNTY HOUSING CRISIS

NICOLE WILSON

ORANGE COUNTY COMMISSIONER – ORLANDO SENTINEL ON JANUARY 10, 2023

“I think it’s such a key component to our overall housing-crisis conversation,” said Commissioner Nicole Wilson, whose west Orange district includes real-estate hot spots Horizon West and Winter Garden. “There was so much attention given (last year) to rent stabilization but this is where the rubber meets the road and we figure out, really, how do we provide inventory up and down the line?”

JON WEISS

PLANNING, ENVIRONMENTAL, AND DEVELOPMENT SERVICES – ORLANDO SENTINEL ON JANUARY 10, 2023

“We’re still in a crisis,” Weiss said. “We still have an awful lot of work in front of us.”

He said the county may be willing to convert failing commercial properties into housing.

“You’ve got these sort of dead, dying or underutilized shopping centers,” Weiss said, speaking hypothetically. “What else could it be? There may be opportunities for housing or some type of redevelopment. ... We think there’s a lot of opportunities across the county for that.”

By adding housing inventory, the county could loosen the tight rental market

When demand for housing outpaces supply, home values climb, putting home ownership out of reach for many, Weiss said.

Orange County isn't looking at helping people pay their rent or punish landlords. The county is trying to make it easier for developers to build housing and consider places they wouldn't otherwise.

Rent has been exploding over the past couple of years and a big reason has been because of a shortage of places to live.

ORANGE COUNTY HOUSING CRISIS & POPULATION GROWTH

With rising costs of both materials and construction, housing production has been down.

Due to that, the more people who move to Orange County, which is an estimated 5% increase a year in population, is driving the costs of rental units. If potential buyers can't buy a home then they are snagging up apartments.

The county is working to identify places like run-down shopping centers or vacant lots that could be redeveloped for housing.

Orange, alongside Miami-Dade, Hillsborough, Broward and Palm Beach counties, are expected to make up nearly 52% of the growth between 2020-2030. Osceola County is No. 8, with an expected population growth of 179,540 new residents during that time.

Population growth in metro Orlando has created demand for new housing, among other factors, Devon Quist, senior development associate at Dominion, previously told Orlando Business Journal.

Data from the county shows only slightly above the average number of units that are being built right now. Developers say part of that is the county's own problem.

Staff and commissioners are also taking up to three years to give projects the green light, delays that add to a project's cost to build.
